Potato Dawn

A Morning Breakfast at Candy Kitchen in Bridgehampton, July 2020

By Dan Rattiner

At a quarter to eight on Monday, Joe Kozniak walked into the Candy Kitchen for his morning coffee. Sitting at the counter were four of the regulars who always assembled there to talk about the goings on at the beginning of the workday.

It was July 3, 2020. Joe sidled up onto the empty stool between Fred Alcott, the town councilman and Fritz Meyer, the real estate man.

"Good morning," Joe said. The others grunted. On his left, Fritz was messing with his wristpod. He was reading the morning news on DanTube.

"Potatoes are at $4.72 a bag this morning. Up 68 cents. That'll do your heart good."

"Helps a little. Damn drought."

Gus came over.

"The usual," Joe said. "Over easy. Coffee to start."

Joe readjusted himself on the stool. He wore denim overalls, a farm hat and high boots, which were still caked with dust from the day before.

"Also, Mrs. Bartlett is tearing down the last of those McMansions on Ocean Road today. They gave her a permit yesterday."

"Is that the one Warren Buffett built all those years ago?"

"No. Bernie Madoff."

"Now there's a name."

"He did somethin'," Fritz said. "I forget what."

"Well the place was fallin' apart since it was abandoned, so it was good riddance."

"So there you are, wait long enough, you get your whole farm back."

"I've got my eye on the gold plated toilet seats in there," Fritz said. "I've got a guy down there going to ask for one of them."

"I kinda miss those folks," said Fred Miller, the town supervisor.

"Like who?"

"Oh, Alan Alda who had that house in Mecox."

"Yeah, he was neat. You know he had a sense of humor. He had an indoor pool. And right alongside it a pool table. My dad told me that. He painted his living room."

"And J. Lo."

"J. Lo never had a house out here."

"Remember some of those big fights we had in town hall with those people?"

"Sure."

"What about those helicopter battles. Tons of them coming in every Friday night, making that awful racket. Then fighting with one another about whose house they should go over to rattle the dishes and all."

"Those sure were crazy times before the Wall Street meltdown."

"Remember when your brother was building that Belgian brick driveway in Water Mill for that billionaire? I forget his name. And it was April and some other billionaire wanted HIS driveway finished, and your brother could only do one before Memorial Day? So they'd have to choose."

"Who could forget that? They just bid it through the roof. A $15,000 job, bid up to $115,000 by one of them before the other quit."

"Who won, anyway?"

"I don't know. But I knew the guy who lost. He had a blond trophy wife and a Lamborghini, a fancy Italian automobile. I can't recall his name. Some guy who bundled derivatives, but he did not have his driveway finished before Memorial."

"Haven't seen one of those Lamborghini things out here in a dog's age."

Joe glanced out the window. Out in front of the Candy Kitchen was his pickup truck with the fertilizer in the back. And a few other old trucks and that was it.

"One thing I don't miss is those traffic jams," Joe said.

"Doin' anything for the Fourth of July?" Fred asked.

"Well, they're having the biggest clam competition at the Trustee's Museum in East Hampton, I think we're going to go there, my wife said. It's around five they pick the winners."

"I'll see you there."

At that moment, Pauline Reysell came into the Candy Kitchen, swinging her big shoulder bag. She was President of the Bridgehampton Chamber of Commerce and a big town booster. Also a pain in the neck, or so this crowd thought. She sat by herself at a table and read her personalized DanTube on her wrist.

"Hope you fellas are coming to the Chamber meeting on Monday," she said across the linoleum, apparently having noticed herself there was such a meeting. "We're talking about a big Miss Hamptons competition for Labor Day Weekend. It's something new. But we think it'll get the tourists out for Labor Day Weekend."

"We'll be there missy," Fritz said, referring to everybody on the stools whether they liked it or not.

Gus came over. Pauline ordered an egg sandwich and tea.

"Any other big doings at the Chamber?" Ed asked. Ed owned the mortuary in town, and was sitting down at the far end of the counter.

"We've started working on the Hampton Classic Dog Show," she said. "Any of you fellas want to volunteer?"

"I'll wait for the announcement," Ed said, waving his wrist with the iPod on it. He'd been a volunteer the year before and went there, but found nothing for himself to do.

The dog show had replaced the Horse Show two years earlier. But it was in the same location and on the same weekend, right before Labor Day up there on Snake Hollow Road. There were prizes in all sorts of divisions — herding, birding, fetching and obedience.

"We're going to offer the Grand Prix prize," said Frank Begley from down at the far end of the counter next to Ed at the far end. "I talked to the wife about it yesterday. $500 of Alpo Dog Food."

"That's going to be fun," said Joe.

"You know who I really miss?" said Fred. "Christie Brinkley. And that other little girl, what's her name."

"Who?"

"Katie Lee Joel. Now that girl could cook."

"Those days are gone, Joe. And they're not coming back."

"It just made me think I ought to get my hair cut," Joe said. "It's sticking out crazy like."

"How did she make you think of that?"

"She was always so well groomed."

"It's just that potato bug spray you use."

"Well, I could get it cut. Then it wouldn't stick out."

"So do it."

Up above the cash register, on a shelf, there was the police sqawk box, and at that moment, it lit up, and there was the image of Hal, the young deskman at the station six miles away hollering away.

"There's a run of bluefish," Hal said in his crackly voice. "Down at Sagg Main. I just got the call from some guy I never heard of. Ernest, he said, from Bay Shore. He said there's millions of them. Jumpin' right out of the surf and onto the beach."

The kid knew everybody in town was watching to him.

Everybody in the Candy Kitchen slid off their stools, and telling Gus that he should just put everything on their tabs, headed out the door.

Joe was the last one out.

"I'm coming too," Gus said from behind the counter. He was taking off his apron. "Gonna lock up for an hour. So just close it good behind you."

"What about Pauline?"

Joe motioned to the table. There was no Pauline.

"Oh she's already heading out the back. She's gonna beat you down there I think."

Joe walked across the sidewalk, opened the passenger door to his truck, pulled out the fishing rod behind the front seat and set it on the passenger seat. Then he ran around the car, got in and roared off toward the Town War Memorial Monument at the crossroads in the center of town. When he got there, he made a right, then a mile down at Sagaponack Road he turned left past all the abandoned mega-mansions there and headed down toward the beach.

Hopefully, he'd have enough for dinner for his wife and kids and even the help, who were right now digging potatoes on the 200 acres behind his farmhouse. It was surprising what those Wall Street guys could do, considering they'd never worked in farm fields before.

I Built a Wall?

Buyer of Most Expensive Home in U.S. in Permit Trouble Here

By Dan Rattiner

It seems like almost a lifetime ago that billionaire Ron Baron purchased the De Menil property on Further Lane in East Hampton. It was, in fact, just 18 months ago. But this was a different world then.

At that time, Baron's purchase, at $103 million, was not only the most expensive residential real estate transaction in the Hamptons, it was also the highest transaction of such property in America.

I think the property wasn't even on the market when it sold. But three different buyers approached the De Menils about purchasing this 70-acre oceanfront parcel two years ago, and over the next three months engaged in a bidding war with one another about it. It was later learned that it began about $70 million and then it went up and up. When it got into nine figures, Adelaide De Menil and her husband Ted Carpenter figured, well, why not? They'd lived there for 40 years. Maybe it would be good to move on. And though they were wealthy in their own right, certainly the price was a record breaker.

And so it was that Baron finally won the day. In November of 2007, the De Menils moved out. And Baron came in with bulldozers.

A great deal of water has gone under the dam since then, and hardly any of it is good for Baron. Late last summer, with the real estate market flat, the economy began to teeter and fall. In October, Baron was listed as having a net worth of $1.4 billion by Forbes Magazine in its annual survey of the 400 richest men in America. He was ranked #264. By the end of the year, with stocks falling on markets everywhere, the prices for stock in Baron's companies were less than half of what they were in September, when Forbes likely tallied up everything to see who would make their 400. Surely, he was no longer a billionaire.

Now things have gotten even worse, at least here in East Hampton. Baron's plan, back when he bought this property, was to combine it with the 30-acre property where he has had his per-

SALE OF SOUTHAMPTON HOUSE REDUCES JAIL TIME

By Dan Rattiner

Terri Gaines' house in Southampton is being sold this week. It's not getting sold for the amount she put it up for, which is a pretty common story these days. What is not a common story is that the amount she's selling it for is directly related to the time she spends in jail. The lower the amount she gets, the more time she spends. The higher amount she gets, the less time.

It must have been a pretty harrowing time for Gaines during this past year, as the market price for real estate sank lower and lower. Finally, though, it is coming to an end. It's not particularly good news. But it's over.

Gaines, over a period of six years between 1999 and 2005 was the bookkeeper for the Montauk Fire Department. During that time, unbeknownst to anybody, she managed to siphon off $539,000 for her own personal use. She spent about $110,000 for personal items for herself and private school for her kids. She spent $66,000 for nobody knows what because the checks were made out to her directly. And she spent $330,000 on vacations at gambling casinos and vacation resorts. She's well traveled, but on the fire department's money.

When the loss was finally discovered, people were amazed that she had done that. She is a well-known local girl, born and raised here. People think, or thought, highly of her. But she did it. And she's very sorry about it.

Judge Ralph Gazzillo, who handled the case, was, of course, not so pleased. In a plea bargain, it was decided that she should serve three to nine years in state prison. On the other hand, if she made restitution of the full amount, he would reduce her sentencing to one to five years. But Gaines didn't have the money.

What Gaines did have, however, was a house

Among other things, they present a formidable barrier against flooding, not only of Baron's property, but also of all the properties there along Further Lane. That they were protected also meant that on this part of Baron's property, people such as hikers or birdwatchers or fishermen could walk on foot across the land, at least

Were they just expecting a small slap on the wrist fine with the wall staying a fait accompli and then let bygones be bygones? If they did, they underestimated the Town, and they also forgot that the Town had a very big card to play in all this — the application asking that the Town approve Baron's nine-home, $100

Tucker Hewes, who is a spokesman for Baron, said, "The environmental integrity of this property is a priority for the owner. The owner's representatives have been working closely with the Town to resolve these issues."

Bad Idea

Southampton to Turn Bias Crimes over to Suffolk County Police

By Dan Rattiner

Southampton Town has made the incredible decision to refer all hate crimes that are reported in that Town to the Suffolk County Police for disposition.

At the present time, all of the other police departments on the east end, Southold, Riverhead, Sag Harbor Village, East Hampton Town and Village and Southampton Village, all continue to handle their own hate crime reports, calling in the County only in extreme circumstances and even then still retaining the lead role in those cases.

How this will turn out for Southampton Town I do not know. But I suspect it will result in a dramatic "drop" in hate crimes in that community, because "drop the folder in the trash" seems to be the order of the day for the Suffolk County Police when the matter involves bigoted whites and either legal or illegal Hispanic victims.

Having made the decision to ship all hate crime reports to the County, Southampton Town will now be able to report about the plummet in hate crimes in the town. And they can urge other east end communities to abandon investigating local hate crimes too. The County Police have reported that they had exactly one complaint of a hate crime against Hispanics all last year. This has earned them a State Investigation about their practices.

A good example of how Suffolk County handles hate crime involves the murder two months ago of an Ecuadorian national named Marcelo Lucero. It was no big deal, according to County Executive Steve Levy. "If it happened in Nassau County," he said when it was making headline news, "it would be a one day news story."

Here is what happened that night.

When it gets dark in and around Patchogue, Bay Shore and Sayville, where a lot of this stuff seems to be going on in the county, the local young white kids and other bigots go out and beat up Hispanics for fun.

The murder happened seven weeks ago. A group of six teenagers went out to "Get a Mexican," as they refer to what they intend to do when they come upon south-of-the-border people. The phrase "Get a Mexican" is popular in the high school. It was a Saturday night. Downtown Patchogue is not well lit. In a parking lot, they found two "Mexicans," actually Ecuadorians and brothers, who they taunted and then attacked with knives. One got away and ran to tell the police who were a few blocks away. The other, Marcelo Lucero of Ecuador, died in the parking lot from the wounds.

Unfortunately, this happened on a night when Patchogue Village Officials were not out hoping to prevent trouble. Concerned about how the County Police are "policing" their town, and without a police department of their own, they have

FIGHT TO LEAVE WINE SALES TO THOSE IN THE KNOW

By Debbie Tuma

As President Obama struggles to implement his economic stimulus package, Governor Paterson works on the state budget. One plan to bolster state coffers would allow supermarkets and grocery stores to start selling wine, resulting in a franchise fee. Although this may appeal to some supermarket chains, which have the space and staff, local vineyards and liquor stores say it could present a great hardship.

"This would put many of our mom and pop wine and liquor stores out of business," said Paul Tavernier, a 31-year owner of Atlantic Wines and Liquors in Amagansett, and a member of the Metropolitan Package Store Association. Tavernier called his state representatives and is circulating a petition in his store that says, "Keep wine out of supermarkets."

"Governor Paterson is looking for quick money, and he thinks if he gets wine into supermarkets they'll need a wine license. But if he knocks out the small stores, he'll have fewer licenses overall," Tavernier said. His three-year wine license cost him $1,626, including the filing fee of $90.

"If all these small stores close, he'll lose this added revenue as well," said Tavernier, adding that he buys maybe five cases of each wine, which he marks up by a percentage. Supermarkets can buy 50 cases and sell them at a lower price, which also hurts liquor stores.

"For us smaller stores to stay in business, we'll have to charge more for liquor, to make up for what we lose in wine. Right now 70% of my business is wine," he explained. "In the long run, this will hurt the industry and the state."

Governor Paterson is hoping that by bringing the wines into the supermarkets, he could bring in about $105 million the first year, and about $54 million the next. He is also proposing to raise the tax on wine from 18.9 cents per gallon to 51 cents, and the beer tax from 11 cents per gallon to 24 cents. Right now, New York is only one of 15 states that does not allow supermarkets to carry wine.

"A lot of small liquor stores out here live week to week, especially in this economy," said Dan DePetris, whose family has owned DePetris Liquor Store in Bridgehampton since 1945. "If King Kullen gets wines, I think they would probably undercut our prices, and if small stores like mine go out of business, then they'll raise their prices after we're gone. That's my theory — it's just not a good thing."

Mark Fashion, owner of Six Corner Wines and Liquors in Westhampton Beach, said he and his employees now make a living, own their houses, and live in the community where they work. But he said if wines are sold by big chains, the revenue would go to corporate headquarters, which are often out of state.

Mike Carolan, of Finest Kind Wines and markets, like Waldbaum's and King Kullen, say they'd like to be able to sell wines, like chains in other states offering one-stop shopping. King Kullen is about to make a petition available for customers to sign, in an effort to get the okay from state lawmakers.

The manager of the Waldbaum's store in East Hampton, who declined to be identified, said his store is already carrying one brand of wine but they're not allowed to sell an assortment. He said that, outside New York State there are liquor stores within grocery stores, something he'd like to see happen here.

But some of smaller grocery stores in the Hamptons worry about the possibility of competing with their neighboring liquor stores, and jeopardizing their businesses. Matt Schiavoni, an owner of Schiavoni's Market in Sag Harbor, said, "For us, it's not something heard about so many hate crime calls to the police that go uninvestigated that these officials sometimes go out at night to stand in parking lots, armed only with cell phones, hoping to help. They missed this one. It might have saved a life.

A generation ago, every town and village in Suffolk County had its own police force. The County had its own too. And then one day, it was suggested as an economy measure that the County drop its local police forces and just accept a very expanded and up-to-date County Police Force to take things over.

The six western towns in the county, which have about two million people in them, agreed to this. Today there are only isolated police forces in the western and central parts of the county, usually at villages that are not much bigger than private communities. And the Suffolk County police are welcome in.

Here on the East End, however, the five towns, Riverhead, Southold, Southampton, East Hampton and Shelter Island, refused to go along with this. They said that though the five eastern towns comprise half the county, they had only about 150,000 residents in them. In a rural area, it would be better to have local police.

Later, about 10 years ago, the Suffolk County Police were actually banned from policing the five eastern towns. They could still be called in to either assist or handle murders or other serious crimes beyond the ability of the local police. But other than that, no thanks. I think the

Obama's Toilet Paper

I really am quite fascinated by the fact that Obama uses a Blackberry, has officially gotten his puppy and has decided where his kids are going to school. I'm really hoping that soon I'll read some news on what type of dress his wife wore at the, oh wait, never mind. Well then I'd really like to find out if the media could do a big story on whether or not he wears boxers or briefs, because that would be fascinating. I'd love to know what brand of toilet paper he buys, or if he's made a decision yet on what razor blade he is going to use in the morning, or what drapes he's picking, or what brand of coffee he drinks. Lattes? OH THAT WOULD BE A SCOOP.

Since I voted for Obama, the news coverage has just been so exciting. I think I spent about 18 hours studying his dance moves at the inauguration while watching them over and over online, and then practicing them in an online chat room with some friends using iChat and my built-in laptop camera. I got some pretty good advice on how to improve. I also studied intensely the important politics behind what kind of dress his wife wore at the inauguration. What does it mean that her designer was young? What is the REAL meaning? Does he like young people? Is this a shot at old designers? Did Obama help choose it or was it all his wife's decision? What a conversation this was at the Rattiner dinner table the other night, as it really is important on the outcome of the country and the global economic crisis THAT IS MAKING ME CRAZY defining moment took place when, as I recall, some County Police were seen up near the Montauk Dock Restaurant letting the air out of the tires of a particular fisherman they did not like having drinks there.

That did it.

We say "Good luck" to Southampton Town with their bias crime control decision. It seems to me it could not have been a worse decision under the circumstances.

* * *

In another piece of news this week, some of the legislators in Suffolk County, alarmed at the drift of events in the county, have introduced a bill to be called "Marcelo Lucero's Law."

Introduced by Wayne Horsley (D-Babylon) and DuWayne Gregory (D-Amityville) the bill will strengthen the county's hate crime law.

If this bill passes and County Executive Levy signs it, those convicted of hate crimes in the county would, upon repeat convictions, receive ever escalating fines. First, second and third offenses would get fines of $1,000, $2,000 and $5,000 respectively. After that, the fines would be $10,000 and $20,000.

The money raised from these fines will be earmarked to fund the Suffolk County Junior Human Rights Commission Day, a day in high schools dedicated to the fighting of anti-bias crime.

In the press release announcing the introduction of this bill, there was no comment one way or another from County Executive Steve Levy.

EVERY TIME I LOOK AT MY 401K! STOP EATING MY MONEY ECONOMY! STOOOOOOP! AHHHHH!!!!

Woo sahh.

In these trying times, I'm lucky to have a 401K, all half of it.

The dress, its meaning, and what it has to do with the economy, is just beyond my understanding is all. The dress was green right? So is money. It's all about the subliminal things.

As a journalist, I decided to do an investigation on the toilet paper Obama uses, because, first, it was my idea to do it and I don't want it to get stolen by some other news organization. Being the first guy to break a story is the coolest thing you can possibly do in the news business.

Second, the American people need to know what brand of toilet paper he uses. It's important. For your future, for my future.

Okay ready folks, here it is. After some investigation, I've discovered that Obama doesn't just use one specific type. He uses all brands and all softnesses. AND, if you can believe it, colors. White, pink, blue — he doesn't see race when it comes to TP. I released all of this information to the Associated Press the same day that this article you're reading was published. That way Dan's Papers would get the exclusive on it, but thanks to the Internet, our exclusive news lasted about eight and a half seconds. So when you see the TP story about Obama on CNN, you can be confident that I was the one who made it happen.

The Second Most Important Decision You'll Ever Make.

And this brand-new college on the Atlantic Ocean can help. We're Stony Brook Southampton and we change all the rules. And since we're worried about Planet Earth, we're looking for forward thinkers who share our doubts and dreams.

So we erased the line separating student and faculty. Instead, you'll be partners in exploring topics that impact Earth's sustainability—environmental studies, marine sciences, business, ecosystems, or environmental design, to name just a few. You'll be diagnosing the land's troubled harvest  and the ocean's declining health, and seeking local (and worldwide) cures. Oddly, while working as part of a team, you'll start thinking for yourself. A priceless habit.

But we never forget why the world's  worth saving. Well, neither will you. Without even trying, you're caught up in the sheer joy of knowing you're doing something good for the world. And it sticks.

And as if that's not enough, we try to  make this the "greenest" campus possible.

THE HAMPTON SUBWAY CLUB NEWSLETTER

Along with the New York Subway System, Hampton's Subway is the only underground transit system in the State of New York.

By Dan Rattiner

Week of January 29 to February 12, 2009

Riders this week: 5,233

Rider miles this week: 56,304

DOWN IN THE TUBE

Washington contacted us! President Obama may visit our little subway system. Subway employees are encouraged to iron their uniforms every day until we have more information.

ONE HUNDRED MILLIONTH PASSENGER

By totaling our revenue and dividing that by the cost of a token or swipe card, we have determined that sometime between Tuesday and Thursday next week, our one hundred millionth passenger will pass through our turnstiles.

We will surprise this passenger when the time comes, and bring him or her to the Hampton Bays Headquarters where, no matter what time of day or night it is, we have a ceremony awarding a big FOUNDERS CUP, with the name of Ivan Kratz, the long dead builder of the subway, engraved on it in his very own handwriting. We will alert all passengers of this event over our loudspeakers, but it may be too short notice for everyone to get down to Hampton Bays and so we will report on the event in the next issue of Dan's Papers.

DELAY LAST SATURDAY

The half-hour systemwide delay last Saturday at 10 p.m. was caused by a love spat on the Southampton platform. A young engaged couple, who shall remain nameless, got into an argument there, which resulted in the bride-to-be hurling her engagement ring out onto the tracks and storming out of the subway station. Forty-five minutes later, she returned in tears, with her mother and with the information that she had changed her mind, would marry him and wanted her ring back. The staff on the platform obliged her by shutting down service until workmen could find it for her.

SLOWDOWN

Due to the cold weather, the trains will be running between stations at 26 miles an hour instead of the usual 34. The reason is ice. You may wonder how tracks underground could ice over. But somebody had laced the oil we brush onto the tracks at the end of every day to keep the wheels from squealing with water to save money and that water froze, nearly causing an accident when the D train slid into the Amagansett station. That individual will remain nameless, but we will say that Henry Crackalow, of Quogue, is on extended leave.

BASINOBA CURRENCY VALUE SOARS

Last year, the newly formed African Kingdom of Basinoba purchased 1.6 billion Hampton Subway tokens from us so it could make the token its official currency. The Basinoway, (pronounced bas-in-oh-WAY) as it is called, has been about two to the dollar, but in recent months, considering all the huge vein of underground raw diamonds found in Basinoba this past year, the value of the Basinoway has soared. Currently, you'll get nearly $11 for one Basinoway. If you have Basinoways stashed away in a jar or in a drawer somewhere, you could be rich but not even know it — in Basinoba, of course, if you can get there.

COMMISSIONER ASPINALL'S MESSAGE

I am resting up on St. Barts as you read this, and it is warm and sunny but we've had nothing but showers for the last few days, off and on. Not so pleasant. I am here to talk to government officials who are considering building a little subway system on this island. I think it is a bad idea. It would only have one stop, from the plans that they showed me.

I am also upset about a hostile takeover attempt letter I have received from the BART subway system in San Francisco, which is a very badly run system and I should know because I was the manager there long ago. We at Hampton Subway have plenty of money to defend this, but if you want to do your part too, send money to Hampton Subway, 48 Main Street, Hampton Bays. If it exceeds $10,000, we will honor you by mounting a picture of you in a frame halfway between any two stations of your choice. Those zipping by can salute you.

ESTATE OF MIND

Real Estate Rants and Rumbblings

Living in the Hamptons, for What it's Worth

By T.J. Clemente

The old retired sailor looked at me and said, "Everyone is telling me my home is worth less, but to me as I get older it's worth more. It's my home and means more every year I live here."

One really doesn't have to look at the final sales numbers to know that overall 2008 wasn't a great year for the real estate industry on the East End of Long Island, but I did. Looking at Suffolk Research's numbers for Suffolk County in 2008 show a trend in total home sales that started in calendar year 2006, with 3,148 units sold. That cascaded down in 2008, to just 1,973 units sold. Amazingly, in 2006 the median home price for the entire East End was $660,000. Although it jumped to $740K in 2007, it dropped down again in 2008, to $650K.

Of the five towns of Suffolk County, statistics for East Hampton Town were most notable: Volume was down to only 396 units for the entire year. In East Hampton Town in 2006, 645 units were sold; in 2007 it was 648. According to Suffolk Research, that was a drop of 46.5% in dollar sales ($1.256 billion to 2008's $672 million).

The greatest reduction, however, was on Shelter Island, where the dollar sales dropped 49.3% compared to 2007. The Town of Southampton saw its total unit sales drop from 1,329 in 2007 to 882 in 2008. Total dollar sales fell 32.9% from 2007. Riverhead sales dollar drop was the most drastic of the five towns, at 16.2% with 327 unit sales in 2008 versus 387 in 2007. Southold numbers came in with dollar sales down 18% versus 2008. Unit sales for 2008 were 319, down from 420 in 2007. Actually, according to the data, 2008 total sales dollars in Suffolk County were $2.69 billion versus $4.182 billion in 2007.

What does this all mean? Looking on the positive side, with substantial downward movement in dollar sales, the actual home value has held up well (compared to the Dow), with the median prices county-wide down a mere average of $10,000 per home. None the less, the concept that buying and selling homes is as easy as mouse clicks on a laptop has been shattered. Now homes stay on the market around nine months in Suffolk County when they are priced correctly.

Martin Mayer, the noted Brookings Institute Scholar, said, "Confidence and credibility" are two ingredients needed for recovery not only in real estate but for the country's overall economy. Every year couples get married, people have children, and working couples retire. All of them need new housing, economic downturn or not. What they will be persuaded to pay for their housing needs will be based on how they view their future ability to pay and make money. At the moment their confidence on the whole is not as it is in a boom period.

Town & Country Real Estate is reporting an actual increase in the median price of homes in some North Fork towns compared to the fourth quarter '07. Their numbers seem to predict a movement back to normalcy, proof that the affordability of homes with lower median prices are attracting buyers. The median prices, according to Suffolk Research, list Riverhead at $410K and Southold at $500K. Compare that to East Hampton's median home price at $995K or Southampton's of $799.9K. Where will a first time buyer or a retiree, faced with uncertain money issues, look to buy a home? The South Fork has a sizzle factor, but at the moment the economy just isn't sizzling.

Town & Country, in its fourth quarter reports, emphasizes the performance of homes versus Wall Street. But the reality is that it was the success of Wall Street that created the capital that made the south fork market run so wildly. It's as simple as this: the fewer multi-million dollar Wall Street bonuses, the fewer multi-million dollar East End sales. To point at a better performance of real estate verses Wall Street is a double edged sword.

Brokers at Corcoran, Brown Harris Stevens, Prudential Douglas Elliman, Town & Country, Hampton Realty Group and others stand poised to turn 2009 into a miracle year. U.S. Airways flight 1549 showed that an experienced, well trained pilot and crew can navigate through difficulties safely. Many real estate agencies on the East End reflect such a crew. With low expectations, a strong year may emerge.

The magic of the ocean, the beauty of the towns haven't been devalued. Those lucky enough to live on the East End know the value their homes, as they assure an exquisite quality of life.

we're looking toward doing. Our neighbor, the Sag Harbor Liquor Store, has been there for a long time. We have a grocery business that's growing in many directions, so we don't need to carry wines. If we were to carry wines we'd have to be knowledgeable about them. It would be a whole new business. We would have to set it up right, and it's just not something we need or care to do."

NYS Assemblyman Fred Thiele of Sag Harbor said he also thinks it's "a bad idea" to sell wine in supermarkets and grocery stores. "I think it would adversely impact the small wine and liquor stores, and it would also open up more possibility of having DWIs," he said. "Our local wineries also have concerns that if they allow wines in grocery stores, they will be carrying wine from other vicinities as well, which will give our local vineyards more competition." Thiele said the state has been considering the idea of selling wines in grocery stores for "about 30 years, every time they need to think of ways to increase money in their coffers."

Tom Morgan, wholesale wine manager at Lenz Winery on the North Fork, said he's against having wine sold in grocery stores because "in most stores they don't have the skills to sell the higher priced wines, and it's a betrayal of the trust between the state and retail license holder."

"This is a short-sighted, money-generated contrivance that the state came up with, and there is no long-term benefit to the consumer or the wine business," he said.

that, with some of the money, she had built for herself in Montauk up in Culloden Shores. She'd put that up for sale. Surely the proceeds of the sale of that house would provide the funds for the restitution. The property was appraised. She was right about that. The house would probably sell for about $550,000, considering what the market was at that time.

As time passed and as real estate values sank, there were a few lowball offers for the house, and then not even that. Prices were coming down, and unless that situation was reversed, Gaines' jail time would be going up.

You think you've got troubles? In the plea bargain, there really was no provision for what might happen if Gaines were able to make only partial restitution. But lawyers familiar with the case say that it really doesn't have to be all or nothing. If it's three to nine for no money and one to five for full restitution, then surely paying half would land her somewhere in between. And other amounts might be considered for smaller or larger stays in the slammer.

There's a lot of sympathy for Gaines in Montauk at this time. People say that with the house lingering on the market for more than a year, they should put the matter behind them and let her get on with her life. But judges don't see things that way. She had done what she did. Judge Gazzillo made her an offer. It was not his fault the market tanked.

The plea bargain arrangement was made in late December of 2007. The judge wanted her back in his court in January with the money.

Certainly, at that time, it seemed that could be done. People were lining up for water-view houses at that time.

To his credit, the judge gave her extensions to the date when he would award her sentencing. The first was to March 2008, then to May 18, 2008, then to September. There was a "final" extension to January 9, 2009, and then, as it appeared that finally this house was now in contract, to February 6.

As this is written, it is January 16. The Montauk house never did sell, but a house on Sandford Place, in Southampton, willed to her by her mother, was sold last week for a sum, which, on the surface, would seem to solve the problem. It went for $850,000. There are, however, back taxes owed and perhaps some mortgage payments, so it is possible that in the end, the net paid out in restitution might be below $539,000. If it were one percent below, she would have to serve one year plus 18 days extra.

We will know on February 6, when Gaines is back before Judge Gazzillo in Islip for sentencing.

Keep in mind that you can always get one quarter of your sentence off for good behavior, so the actual jail time would decrease, by that mathematical equation, from 12 months and 18 days to 9 months and 12 days.

It's been a unique and harrowing experience for her and her family. Hopefully, beginning February 6, they will know where things stand and begin to get back to their lives.

Over The Barrel... with Lenn Thompson

ONABAY Is Onto Something

Onabay Vineyards (onabayvineyards.com) is one of the North Fork's newest producers, but not everything is new about them. In fact, there is plenty of history — and experience — behind their wines.

With a vineyard that is 18 years old, and managed by veteran vineyard manager Steve Mudd, and Bruce Schneider of Schneider Vineyards making the wines, the Anderson family is setting themselves up for success.

Why the name? Well, the vineyard is on a bay. Thus, Onabay Vineyards.

This is a true family-run winery. The Anderson family, who own the 180-acre farm that houses the vineyard, is involved in every aspect of the winery's operations. Francesca Anderson, a renowned botanical artist, created the drawings of herons that appear on the front labels. Her daughter, Mia C. Anderson, a published poet, wrote the poems that grace the back labels. Francesca's other daughter, Chiara Anderson Edmands, oversees the winery's marketing and promotional efforts.

Their portfolio consists of three chardonnays and two merlots — the staples of North Fork wine.

Onabay Vineyards' 2006 "Unwooded" Chardonnay ($22) is a wine intended to highlight chardonnay's true character — rather than oak or the winemaker's talent. To that end, this wine is fermented entirely in stainless steel and malolactic fermentation was strictly avoided. The nose is light, even austere, with citrus-lemon aromas, faint apples and a minerality reminiscent of the sea. That mineral component is even more intense on a medium-bodied palate and is joined by lemon zest and green apple flavors. There is just enough acid here and the finish is lengthy. If I ate oysters, I'd like to give this wine another try with them.

Partially fermented in oak barrels, Onabay Vineyards' 2007 Chardonnay ($18) it distinctly toasty on the nose with roasted hazelnut, pear and vanilla aromas on the nose. The palate brings bright apple, pear and apple candy flavors with a squirt of grapefruit and a vein of minerality that runs through the wine. Fresh acidity makes this a good, easy-drinking chardonnay.

My favorite of the chardonnay lineup was the Onabay Vineyards' 2006 "Wild Ferment" Chardonnay ($25) which, as the name implies, was fermented using naturally occurring yeasts. White flowers, ripe Bartlett pear and a light sprinkling of baking spice mingle on the nose before giving way to elegant tree fruit, spice and candied lemon peel flavors on the palate. This wine is well balanced with acidity and has a long finished that tastes of baked pear and toffee.

Onabay Vineyards 2006 Merlot ($19) is 95% merlot with 5% cabernet franc blended in. The nose displays red raspberry, strawberry jam, cedar and tobacco aromas with a hint of minerality. The palate is Old World in its flavor profile, combining red fruit flavors with those of cigar box, earth and spice. The mid-palate is a little thin though and the finish is a bit shorter than expected.

By far my favorite of the portfolio was the Onabay Vineyards 2006 "Night Heron" Merlot ($25), a blend of 86% merlot, 9% cabernet franc and 5% syrah. A nicely extracted medium-dark garnet in the glass, the nose presents nice dark fruit aromas of black cherry, black berry and even a little blueberry, accented by basil, thyme and a little smokiness.

That same dark fruit character, black cherry and black raspberry this time, leads on an elegant, medium-bodied palate. Secondary flavors of herbs, mocha and subtle graphite — especially on the long finish — add layers of complexity. The tannins are of medium-intensity, but well integrated. They bring grip but don't overwhelm or punish the palate.

This is a well-priced, delicious merlot that represents Long Island's unique terroir extremely well.

These wines are available at The Tasting Room, a co-op tasting room on Peconic Lane for wineries that don't have their own tasting rooms.

Choosing a Fashionable, Practical Ski Wardrobe

It's time for a little fun in the snow. Whether you're a beginner, intermediate or advanced skier or snowboarder, there are a few things to remember when dressing for a day on the slopes. Layers and quick drying fabrics are a must.

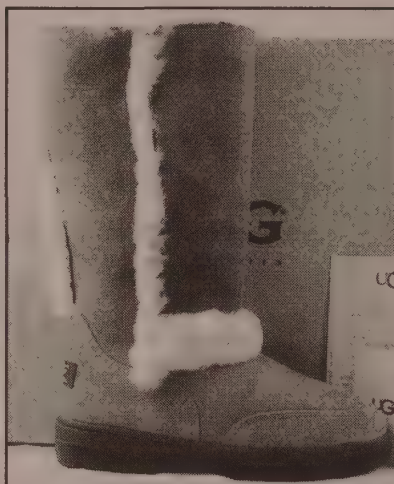

Let's start with our checklist of important items to bring along on the trip: gloves/mittens, base layers and underwear, vest & fleece outerwear, hat, sweater, ski jacket and pants, goggles/sunglasses, boots, socks, ski bib and face mask, if you choose. There are many options when shopping for skiwear. A few good Web sites include pedigreekishop.com, burton.com, sierratradingpost.com and basicskiwear.com.

Ski jackets and pants will be the most expensive investment in your ski wardrobe. There are many high quality ski lines on the market such as North Face, Spyder, Oakley, Salomon, Obermeyer, Burton, Columbia, Marmot, Patagonia and Cloudveil just to name a few. When making your selection, go for comfort, flexibility, warmth and water resistant fabrics. I know from my vast experience of attempting to ski for the first time last season, staying warm and dry is very important. For those of us who take a few tumbles and falls, the snow manages to find a way to get through those layers. Glove liners and a change of socks might be helpful as well.

Don't forget UV protection. The sun is bright and powerful on the slopes, remember to wear sunscreen and eye protection. Goggles or sunglasses designed by Oakley, Smith, RayBan, Bolle, Julbo, Scott and Dragon are great options. Check out Oakley's Ladies Stockholm and many others on sale when you log onto skipro.com.

When it comes to ski accessories, log onto outdoordiva.com for the latest fashionable skiwear. A few standout accessories include smart wool PHD ski socks (priced at $21.95, with a four degree fit system, medium weight) and Black Diamond Patrol Gloves (priced at $92.95, 100% all-weatherproof gloves made with Primaloft and Polar Tec/Hi-loft insulation for extra protection.)

Snow boots are also a necessary investment and there are a few popular brands that come highly recommended. The ever-so-popular Uggs are available in a variety of styles and colors. These warm and cozy fleece-lined boots are at the top of the list (available at uggs.com and many major department stores; prices start at $130 and up). Salomon B29 TS WP Boot is known for its supportive tracking and lacing systems in addition to warmth and comfort, and the North Face Greenland winter boot (priced at $99.99; offers foot support, water-resistance and great traction.) Peruse pricegrabber.com for a few great winter sales on boots.

On the East End make a stop at the Tanger Outlets, where you will find a lot of great buys. Locally, you can find a wide variety of winter gear at many surf shops such as Flying Point (Southampton and Sag Harbor), Espo's Surf & Sport (East Hampton) and Air & Speed (Montauk).

Whether you hit the slopes in Tahoe, Park City, Jackson Hole or Snowmass this season, remember one thing, skiing is all about the outdoors, feeling free and of course, looking fashionable. Now, hit the trails and enjoy!

Ice Skating, Cross Country Skiing in the Great Outdoors

By April Gonzales

The snow stopped my daydreams of moving to Maui as the New Englander in me kicked back in. We have not had such delightful, dry snow in several years. Usually, it lasts a day and then melts, or it's slushy to begin with, but this crystalline powder stuck around.

As the temperature dipped, friends tried the ice on local ponds. While we were waiting for it to fully freeze we went cross-country skiing. I have fiberglass Rossignols with a fish scale base surface that allows me to go up hills as well as down. As a kid I used wooden skis that had to be waxed. The snow type (grainy, icy wet or dry), determined the kind of wax needed to create the right amount of friction for gliding forward, and keeping you from sliding backwards down hills.

There are many trails on the East End that are well maintained and take you through field and forests for a wonderful view of the local winterland landscape.

For the more advanced skiers, there are trails that go through the moraine. The hills in this area can make skiing more interesting and challenging. We took two trails through the laurels in Noyac. One, leaving from the cul de sac on Forest Drive, was an easy uphill glide that took no effort whatsoever, although my heart muscle and circulation were working overtime. What's great about cross-country skiing is that it isn't a lot of physical effort and yet the cardio workout is phenomenal, and, unlike running, it's fun.

Unfortunately, this pretty trail was cut off by a homeowner who put a metal deer fence across the trail and onto the hillside, cutting off access. Turning around we got back in no time, and moved on for longer trails.

We accessed another laurel stand from another location. That was definitely more challenging. The initial run was steep and entered the laurel bush at an angle, from there on the down hill run twisted and turned through the laurel stems. It took some quick footwork to get through.

We skied by teenagers who had built jumps on big hills. Slick, well-used down hill runs on smaller hills were made by the younger crowd.

The sunset cast long purple shadows across the snow in contrast with the reds and oranges in the western sky and peachy clouds outlined in indigo. We decided to cut through someone's yard to get back to the car, rather than face the laurel bushes again. The homeowner came out, asked how the skiing was and invited us to use her driveway as a short cut any time!

As the weekend progressed, the skating crowd came out. We tested out Big Fresh Pond ourselves. My friend was out on the ice jumping up and down and saying, "It's not quite frozen yet."

"Jump up and down a few more times and see if you fall through," I suggested.

A group of us walked the edge with our dogs. As the booming cracks that are made as the ice adjusts to the weight changes sped across the surface, we occasionally decamped rapidly en masse to the shore. But people began to pile onto the lake and a steady stream of skaters tried their skill in the classic elegant dance of balance and glide. The snow fell after the lake had frozen and many people arrived with lightweight plastic snow shovels to clear the ice, but the snow was so light and fluffy you could skate right through it. Some one was even farther out on the lake chopping a hole in the ice to go ice fishing.

Old Town Pond was laden with skaters throughout the weekend. The Village has placed red ladders here in case any one ever falls in, but I haven't heard of that happening in years. Little girls twirled and guys played hockey in separate rinks that had been cleared of snow. Whole families skated through the powdery snow to the south end, away from the crowd, and groups of teens investigated the northern end of the pond.

But the most fun may have been had in my friends' backyard, where they built their own rink on a flat area. Here we tried to teach the little ones how to skate. Starting out with hockey skates is quite a challenge, I always thought that figure skates were easier. With an adult on each side or a chair or crate in front of them, the peewee crowd got its first taste of the fun. I watched in amazement as they cheerfully fell and tried to get up again. My first efforts were to keep myself from tripping. But as I got accustomed to the rhythm again, I found I could still do a minor pirouette, like riding a bike you never forget how to do it. Although watching the little ones making slow progress, we all marveled at how we had ever learned at all.

Protecting the Pine Barrens

If you enjoy hiking on Long Island, chances are you have walked in the Pine Barrens. The Central Pine Barrens comprises 102,500 acres – one fifth of Suffolk County's land mass. The pitch pine and pine-oak forests, coastal plain ponds, marshes and streams of the Rocky Point RCA Property, Robert Cushman Murphy, Otis Pike, Sarnoff Preserves, Sears Bellows, Hubbard County Parks and Red Creek Park all lie within this huge preserve. This region, in the heart of Suffolk, contains one of the greatest concentrations of endangered and threatened plants and animals in the state. The Central Pine Barrens overlies a portion of Long Island's federally designated sole source drinking water aquifer, and provides a significant portion of our drinking water. It's estimated that this 160 square miles of protected land sits atop 60 trillion gallons of high quality drinking water, available to Suffolk County's 1.4 million residents.

To protect this resource, the NYS Legislature passed the Long Island Pine Barrens Protection Act, signed into law on July 13, 1993. The act created a five-member Central Pine Barrens Joint Planning and Policy Commission. The members of the Commission are the Suffolk County executive, Brookhaven, Riverhead, and Southampton town supervisors and one Governor-appointed member. The Commission was established to create and implement a comprehensive land use plan. The Central Pine Barrens Comprehensive Land Use Plan was officially adopted on June 28, 1995. The Plan and the Commission have created three specialized councils to address operational and stewardship needs for this region: the Protected Land Council, the Law Enforcement Council and the Wildfire Task Force. These are multi-jurisdictional and encourage citizen involvement. For more information visit pb.state.ny.us/ and pinebarrens.org.

On January 9, I attended the Central Pine Barrens New Year's Staff and Cooperators Reception. About 100 people attended, including Commission, County Parks and State DEC staff. Also among the attendees were Assemblyman Fred Thiele Jr., Legislator Vivian Vilorio-Fisher, Chief Deputy County Executive Jim Morgo, Brookhaven Director of Environmental Protection, John Turner, and East Hampton Town's Director of Natural Resources, Larry Penny.

Central Pine Barrens Commission (CPBC) Chair, and Governor Appointee, Peter Scully, delivered the welcoming remarks. Scully's discussion of the CPBC's 2008 accomplishments will provide you with some insight into how Governor Paterson's proposed 36 percent reduction in the Long Island Pine Barrens budget would have negative repercussions for Suffolk County residents.

Scully began by saying that 2008 was a productive year. The Commission added Melissa Griffiths, an educator working with local schools, to its staff. Lawrence Hynes finished his first full year as compliance and enforcement coordinator. Year three of the Invasive Species Assessment and Eradication Program on public land was completed. The forest and wetland ecological health monitoring protocol study was completed with the Foundation for Ecological Research in the Northeast. The Dwarf Pine Trail interpretive trailheads displays in West Hampton were erected. The ATV Damage Mitigation Project in Flanders and Hampton Bays was expanded. This multilateral group works together to repair ATV damage and eliminate illegal access points for ATVs. In 2009, State DEC,

Peter Scully, CPBC Chair

TAKE A HIKE By Ken Kindler

Suffolk County Parks and the Town of Brookhaven will undertake a similar effort along the upper reaches of the Carman's River. Significant progress in restoring portions of the Pine Barrens ecosystem through the use of prescribed fire was also made this year. The Wildfire and Incident Management Academy is in its 11th year and attracted 429 students from 30 states and one Canadian province.

Our watershed was protected through transfer of development rights. The Pine Barrens credit program continues to thrive. Credit sales through 2008 reached $28.6 billion and 1753 acres of Pine Barrens have been protected through this program at no cost to tax payers. In December, the Boy Scouts' 403-acre Camp Wauwepex property was protected under the CPBC credit program. Recently, the Boy Scouts sold 1.64 credits to the Town of Riverhead for $123,000 at $75,000 a credit.

The Law Enforcement Council continued its efforts to combat illegal ATV use in the Pine Barrens by impounding 155 vehicles. They are also working with Suffolk County Department of Social Services to address the problem of homeless people living in the Pine Barrens. One of the objectives that Scully proposes for 2009 is for the Commission to play a central role in advancing the concept of an overall plan to protect the Carman's River watershed.

The Central Pine Barrens Commission is a shining example of what can be accomplished when dozens of agencies and organizations work together. It is this kind of cooperative spirit that brings true progress. The CPBC does important work and deserves adequate funding from NY State.

Decorator to the Stars ... of the White House

By Mary Beth Karoll

In parts of this forlorn, foreclosure-filled country, you can purchase a lovely house for $100,000 or less. That is also the relatively modest amount of money America's new First Family has been allotted for jazzing up their quarters at the White House.

Interior designer to Cindy Crawford, Michelle Pfeiffer, Steven Spielberg, Rupert Murdoch and Evelyn de Rothschild, 44-year-old Michael S. Smith was once described in Vanity Fair magazine as "the thinking celebrity's decorator." From this brief compliment alone, Smith would appear to be the perfect choice for those bright and shining stars, the Obamas.

First announced on the Domino magazine Web site, the smart selection of Smith as decorator for the private rooms at the White House is not surprising, as he is known for his updated style combining traditional antiques with unexpected, exotic accents. We now have a well-traveled president who has spent many years living in foreign countries yet also possesses a deep love and appreciation for American history. With Smith's guidance and considerable expertise, the Obamas are sure to put their personal stamp on the interiors, while respecting the storied past of the White House.

Based in Santa Monica, California, but involved in projects across the United States, the busy decorator has published two lavishly-illustrated books, Elements of Style (2007) and Houses (2008), which would have allowed the Obamas to quickly appreciate his talents and the cozy, casual, sunny sense of calmness he gives to traditional settings. Smith is as certain to use inexpensive yet beautifully patterned Indian bedspreads as upholstery cushions as he is to select pricey antiques.

We can assume the high-end Hollywood decorator has forsaken his usual design fee and percentages, or the $100,000 in funds would disappear faster than an investment with Bernie Madoff's firm. Still, Michelle Obama is known for her savvy shopping style and sensible, stylish choice of clothes from mass-market retailers including White House Black Market, the Gap and J. Crew. When it comes to putting her signature on the rather formal White House, the First Lady and Smith seem to be on the same (catalog) page as far as selecting some cheap and chic pieces.

"The family's casual style, their interest in bringing 20th Century American artists to the forefront and utilizing affordable brands and products will serve as our guiding principles as we make the residence feel like their home," Smith said in a recently-released statement. Apparently, the interior designer has already begun shopping for Sasha's and Malia's bedrooms, at "a variety of different outlets, kid-friendly, everyday retail stores," according to a spokeswoman for Michelle Obama.

In other words, although President Obama reveres Lincoln and was inspired by Team of Rivals, Doris Kearns Goodwin's extraordinary study of the 16th president and his cabinet, Michelle Obama will not be taking after the shrew and spend-thrift Mary Todd Lincoln and her pricey decorating schemes. Mrs. Lincoln's acquisitiveness incurred the ire of her husband, who ordered her to stop spending money on "damned flubdubs" when Union soldiers desperately needed uniforms and blankets. From observation, it would seem that Michelle Obama has her priorities in order and is rather more penny-wise than many of her predecessors.

Domino will be revealing more about Smith's plans for the White House family quarters in the coming weeks. Recessionistas, that breed of fashionable and frugal females who evolved from the fashionistas, will be watching to see how the political and the personal combine in this energetic yet economical new era. The Obamas have announced their intention to invite "normal people" to the White House, and it seems that they will also introduce an everyday elegance and family-friendly freshness to the formal First Family's quarters as well.

A Dog with Too Much Time on his Paws

If you have any experience with baby-proofing your home, it's not a far reach to puppy-proof it. If there are rooms where you absolutely DO NOT want your dog to enter, gates are the answer. They're available in every height and width; can be free standing, pressure mounted or wall mounted; and made of wood, metal or plastic. They range from inexpensive to high-end designer types. Once upon a time, when I was a kid, my father used two shutters placed about an inch off the floor. They swung back and forth like saloon doors and hooked in the middle to keep them closed. Actually, it wasn't a half bad idea. Just think how creative you could be with a little help from a home improvement center.

But as a dog trainer and dog lover, I must tell you that puppy-proofing starts with training. A dog, like any member of a household (and I throw that in for those of you who feel guilty restricting your dog's activities) must follow rules and adhere to boundaries from the beginning. If your dog is allowed to jump on the furniture, scratch the doors, run in and out of the house tracking dirt everywhere...well, you get the picture. Instead, by investing time in good old-fashioned training, you'll keep your home décor investments solid.

Get your dog used to the fact that you will clean his paws when he comes in the house. I really like the new Dremel devices that file your dog's nails. It helps to keep the wood floors from being scratched up, the carpeting from pulling and the couch from ripping.

If a puppy is destructive when you leave him alone, then confine him until you return. Do I think it's cruel to confine a dog? I will say that I do not condone kenneling all day – I think that is cruel. But using short periods of confinement while you teach your dog to have freedom without destructive behavior, is acceptable. Think about the alternative. You come home to find your house in shambles and then punish the dog or worse, send him to a shelter.

In addition to the perils of puppyhood, the major causes of destructive behavior in dogs are boredom and loneliness. Think of your dog as a restless kid with too much time on his hands. Play dates with friends (and their dogs) work wonders. The dogs get the added attention they crave while learning social skills. A dog park is another option for increasing your dog's activities – and it's fun for the rest of your family too.

Exercise is a great way for releasing pent up energy, which would otherwise be aimed at your favorite chair or pair of shoes. This does not mean the dog plays in the yard by himself. This means "together time" – long walks or playing ball so that Kahuna is neither bored nor lonely.

With commitment comes sacrifice, but the sacrifice doesn't have to be your furniture, just your time and love.

HOME GuideErr, A parent By Susan Galardi

A Card, a Cinnamon Stick, a Life Experience

It's the dead of winter in the Hamptons. What's a mother to do? Fortunately, there's plenty for kids out here, even off-season. Ice skating at Buckskill and on the North Fork, workshops and classes a CMEE and the Parrish, Guild Hall art classes and kids movies at Bay Street Theatre on Saturday mornings, events at the South Fork Natural History museum and Quogue Wildlife Refuge.

My partner and I aren't the schedule-the-kid-up-to-the-minute types. Like many families, we like having a lot of free time with our son. After all, he LIKES hanging out with us now. So other than school, a dance class and basketball on Saturday morning, he's all ours.

With my partner busy with real estate for a good part of the weekend (Hooray to that), he and I usually end up together all day Saturday, doing whatever we choose from moment to moment. Last Saturday, we stayed in Amagansett to buy a birthday present. The day unfolded in a way that I hope he remembers forever – if not in his mind, in his soul. It's one I won't forget.

Walking to the sportswear store, we passed an art gallery. "Let's buy Poppop some art," he suggested. I said I had something else in mind. "Okay," he said, "But after the sport store let's go to the art store."

The "art store" was the Pamela Williams Gallery. Williams, I later learned from Dan's Papers art critic Marion Weiss, handles some of the best local artists out here. On that cold and frosty morning, there was just one woman, (who turned out to be Williams) in the gallery working at the front desk. I always assume that gallery people aren't thrilled to see a child coming in, but I figured we'd take a quick look and be on our way.

Not possible. Hudson immediately spied some clay figures on the desk and asked about them – he had made and glazed a little clay pot at school a few weeks previous. Williams told us about the artist and the pieces. He was then drawn to an unusual sculpture that incorporated mirrors. Interesting and engaging in and of themselves, the sculptures had a trompe l'oeil element from mirrors that made things "appear" – like a baby in an otherwise empty cradle – proving that people can see things differently if they try. Williams followed Hudson to works by the same artist, showing him how the mirrors were used, taking him outside to see one wood/mirror sculpture through the window, and actually lifting his 50-lb. self to see a sculpture that evoked a Trojan horse.

As Hudson went to each work, Williams explained, asked questions, and entertained comments on pieces like Kim Boulukos's Giacometti-like horse sculptures, and Charles Waller's sculptures constructed from a variety of objects and images, that, according to Hudson, "look like they should do something but don't." He immediately recognized the tall elegant metal sculptures created by our tall elegant neighbor in Northwest, William King. "He's going to teach me how to bend metal," Hudson announced.

We stayed at least a half hour, revisiting some pieces, discovering others. On the way out, he looked at the clay figures again, and asked if he could have a postcard. Then he spied a small bundle of long cinnamon sticks on Williams' desk – a sculpture in itself. He asked what they were, and Williams explained as though she was describing a piece of art, ending with "Would you like one?"

He walked out happy. Referring to the stick and the card in his hands, he said, "I got two things." But in fact, he got more than he'll ever know.

Finance Guru Launches SI Library Dialogues

By T.J. Clemente

On a very cold January 16, at 7 p.m., with a full crowd huddled in the basement, the Shelter Island Public Library launched Friday Night Dialogues@the Library. Martin Mayer, noted columnist, author of 35 books, Brookings Institute Scholar and of course, Shelter Islander, was the speaker. All 65 seats were filled, with many people standing or sitting on the floor, making for a cozy atmosphere. Denise DiPaolo began the evening by introducing Robert Lipsyte – author, TV personality, newspaper columnist and local – as the moderator of the program, titled, “The Current Economic Crisis: Will Anything Work?”

Lipsyte introduced Mayer after stating, “Cell phones may be left on if you are expecting a call from Bernie Madoff about your investments.” Following the laughter, Mayer, the 81-year-old who graduated from Harvard at the age of 19, lit up the room with his wit, and warmed up the audience with his charm. He began his talk by explaining the toxicity of credit default swaps and derivatives, with a clear voice on these complex matters. He described the commerce of Shelter Island in the last few years as “The women of the island selling real estate to each other,” which received a nice laugh. He, like many, believes the repeal of Glass-Steagall, (the law that kept banks and brokerage houses from merging), had much to do with creating our current crisis. He quoted a colleague who said, “Diversification devalues knowledge.” Mayer explained that banks knew how to make loans and brokerage houses knew how to market paper. Somehow, after the mergers, all that went awry. Mayer explained today’s problem of the large numbers of “toxic waste troubled asset” contracts for the banks, “are sort of like roach motels. Once you get in them you can’t get out of them.”

The crowd was very attentive as Mayer jumped from issue to issue, noting the major players of today’s crisis, some who shared their views with him recently. He critiqued the present SEC, FED and Treasury officials as well as the newly appointed, as if he were describing playoff football rosters, pointing out strengths and weaknesses with precise language and candor that held the audience spellbound. He exposed the fact that perhaps many in high places really don’t know what they are doing, while others are brilliant. He believes that it was a mistake to let Lehman Brothers fail, reciting the problems that followed, and believes that the government bailout of insurance giant A.I.G. was a foreign policy decision because A.I.G. was the largest insurance company in Asia. Its failure would have effected our policies in that vital, growing, and heavily populated part of the world.

Mayer does not believe in large super banks because, “the bigger they are, the harder they fall.” He shed some light on the largest financial entity in the world, the Depository Trust, which has assets of about $74 trillion.

While describing the horrors of today’s banking world he said there are “Zombie Banks.” What is a Zombie Bank?

He answered, “A bank that is dead and doesn’t even know it yet."

So what of the TARP $800 billion bailout? Martin Mayer is not a fan of it. He stated his belief that government bailout capital will not stop the bleeding or offer stability. He said that this crisis will come to an end only when private and foreign capital once again emerges to fund the banks and buy the commercial paper. As for the credit freeze at the banks and their non-cooperation, he quoted a friend who said, "The banks don't trust each other's balance sheets because they know how they cooked their own books to hide things."

However, while professing that he believes things will get worse before they get better, Mayer believes ultimately they will get better. He hopes the new Treasury Secretary will get a quick handle on things and describes former Treasury Secretary Paulson as a disaster. As for the Bernie Madoff situation, he said it never dawned on him that the best way to create a Ponzi scheme was to make the investor never want to take his capital out because of the apparent performance of the fund. "People would go elsewhere to get needed personal money because the Madoff fund was supposedly performing so much better than the other investments."

This first Friday Night Dialogue was a rousing success. The series was funded by the late Shelter Islander, Betsy Jacobson, who in addition to being a kind neighbor and Library user, managed around $6 billion in assets at J.P. Morgan. If her goal was to both increase the sense of community at the Library and provide an engaging forum, then she succeeded. The first night was everything small town community should be, and is, on Shelter Island.

Learning to Forestall Foreclosures

By Tiffany Razzano

As our country tries to work its way out of a worsening recession, Elizabeth Capozzoli, a real estate broker at Town & Country, noticed that even the tony East End is no longer impervious to the financial pitfalls that have hit the rest of the United States.

More and more residents of the Hamptons are having a hard time keeping up with their mortgage payments, she says, putting them in danger of losing their homes. "There are so many people out here in trouble," Capozzoli said. "People are falling behind and not saying anything about it until they're three months behind and it's too late to do anything."

For this reason, Capozzoli reached out to Robin Long, of Fier & Long PC Attorneys at Law, and Victoria Hohman, a Manhattan Mortgage broker, to create a series of free seminars to educate the public on their options if they find it difficult to make their mortgage payments. The first of this series was held on Jan. 15 at the Hampton Bays Public Library, with upcoming seminars planned for a yet-to-be determined location in Amagansett and another at HBPL.

One of the most important things Capozzoli hopes people took away from the seminar was that the earlier a homeowner seeks help, the better. "We can help them if we know what's going on," she said. "We want to educate people on what they can do before they fall behind." If they contact their bank when they anticipate they could have trouble making payments, homeowners could restructure and reformat their payment plan.

However, people are often nervous about the stigma that comes with the term "foreclosure" and maybe don't speak up about financial hardships until it's too late. "The word scares people," Capozzoli said. "There's a stigma that you can't pay your bills. They're embarrassed."

Also, if homeowners really find themselves in trouble, rather than letting their house go to foreclosure, they should opt for a short sale. A short sale is when the sale of a house falls short of the balance owed on a loan, but the bank or mortgage lender agrees to the lesser price because of financial hardship. A short sale has a better effect on your credit rating than a foreclosure, but many people are unaware of this. After a short sale, your credit can be salvaged in nine to 18 months and you'll be able to purchase another homeowner's short sale after that.

However, if you opt for a short sale, Capozzoli says, you should hire a real estate broker who is certified to handle such a transaction, as she is, though there aren't many of them. "It's a different process than a regular sale," she said. "You can't just make an offer on a short sale home. It's not a regular sale. These homeowners are facing foreclosure, so you have to get the bank in a contract quickly." Also, you should probably hire an attorney well versed in short sales, because they "know how to talk to people about it. They've got to be a strong negotiator."

People should also realize that they don't have to pay a real estate broker, attorney or anyone else handling their short sale any fees, since they will eventually be paid by the bank, Capozzoli says.

For more information about upcoming seminars on preventive measures for homeowners possibly facing foreclosure, call Capozzoli at 631-288-3030.

A Drifter Drifts back to the Stage

By Tiffany Razzano

Oldies and doo wop fans certainly have something to be excited about. The Debra Liso Band, featuring Prentiss McNeil, has a slew of upcoming gigs all over eastern Long Island. For 25 years, McNeil sang with The Drifters, known for hits such as "Under the Boardwalk" and "Save the Last Dance for Me."

The band will be at Regulars Music Café in Southampton on Jan. 30 and Feb. 13, Digger O'Dell's in Riverhead on Feb. 6 and The Trolley Barn Restaurant in Speonk the next night. Check out myspace.com/debralisoband for their full schedule.

McNeil, who grew up in Deer Park, currently calls Riverhead home. He fell in love with music at a young age, attending Quintano's School for Young Professionals, a professional music high school in New York City, with budding stars such as Bernadette Peters and guitarist Leslie West of Mountain and McNeil always knew he wanted to make a living as a performer. After graduating, he toured and performed with groups of his own. Then his manager said The Drifters wanted him to audition for a spot in the group in 1975.

"I remember they drove up to my house in a limo, had me sing and then said, 'Are you ready to go on the road? Get three suits, your underwear and let's go,'" McNeil said. "I asked them, 'For how long?' And they said, 'There's no telling.' I was on the road a year-and-a-half that first tour."

He sang with The Drifters until 2000, and met Liso at a party for her father about two years ago. Liso, a sax player, grew up on the North Fork and currently lives in Riverhead. Though she's also played in bands, she is the choral teacher and musical director at Hampton Bays High School (HBHS).

Liso and McNeil, after meeting, played in the Sahara band for about a year before branching off to start their own project, The Debra Liso Band, which was named Dan's "Best of the Best" band for the North Fork for 2008. McNeil earned "Best of the Best" vocalist honors. "It just kind of fell together, our playing together," Liso said.

The group plays mostly covers, primarily R & B and soul, including Barry White, The Tramps, Jackie Wilson, KC and the Sunshine Band, even The Doobie

Brothers. And, of course, they play a lot of The Drifters' songs. But, rather than simply mimicking the originals, the group takes each song and adds its signature style. "We're a cover band, but not a copy band," Liso said.

Liso has also been writing original songs, which will be added to the band's repertoire soon. In fact, through McNeil's agent, Gary Reynolds, whose son is a producer for Chuck D and Public Enemy, a song they've written will find its way onto the soundtrack for a movie the hip hop moguls are working on. The band will be hitting the recording studio soon to do a three-song EP of all original material.

Liso also produces local oldies shows, which often feature McNeil and her band. The next one, a benefit for HBHS's music program, will be on April 18. Scheduled to perform are McNeil, The Cascades, Steve Mitchell as Elvis, her brother, Larry Liso, as Frank Sinatra, and more. Keep checking myspace.com/debralisoband for more information.

The Sheltered Island By Sally Flynn

Cook Books: Yes You Can

My brother, Joe Beaudry, gave me Good Housekeeping's Best Home Cookbook for Christmas. Joey used to be a chef, so he really took the time to select an easy to use cookbook with terrific recipes. This spiral bound cookbook lays flat when you use it, has coated pages that wipe clean, and an "Emergency Substitutions" page telling you what you can use instead of an egg, for example. It tells you how to set up a kitchen, how to set a formal and informal table, what wines work with what foods, just everything. There's probably even a page with a recipe for picking the right lotto numbers.

The book puts a heart symbol next to recipes that are heart-smart, there are symbols for sugar free recipes, Low Cal, Low Carb and such. I appreciate the little extras, but there is one area in which all cookbooks lie: "Preparation Time."

"Preparation Time" supposedly represents the average amount of time it takes to prepare the meal. But the clock starts when all the ingredients and equipment are gathered and ready. THAT'S the lie! They need to give estimated "Pre-Preparation Time."

"Has anybody seen my measuring cup? The little Pyrex glass one?" the mother calls out from her lonely kitchen. She hopes to prepare "Easy to Make Swedish Meatballs with Mushroom Gravy and Cranberry Chutney - Prep Time: 20 min."

"I think Katie's using it for her paints, Mom," answers a disembodied voice from somewhere in the house.

"Okay, how 'bout the bigger one? I need a measuring cup with a pour spout if I'm going to make gravy for this recipe."

"I think Dad has it in the garage," answers the voice.

"JOE!" mother yells through the garage door. "Do you have my one quart measuring cup?"

"Yeah," responds Joe from somewhere in the garage, "I used it to put oil in the car. You want it now?"

"Yes please."

Cleaning off the cup, she wonders how the Penzoil will taste mixed in with the olive oil and will these people even notice considering the way they bolt down food like condemned men?

"Where's my ladle?" she calls out.

"Grace has it in the sandbox outside," calls out another disembodied voice.

Mom retrieves the ladle, washes it and opens the refrigerator.

"Who ate the hamburger meat?"

"Jerry made burgers for his breakfast, Mom," comes the response.

"Tell your father I went to George's to get hamburger," yells Mom as she grabs her handbag and schlepps out the front door.

Finally dinner is served and everyone likes it.

"This is great, honey," says himself. Mother smiles and decides to try it with 30-weight Penzoil next time.

"Easy to Make Swedish Meatballs with Mushroom Gravy and Cranberry Chutney - Prep Time: 20 min; Pre-Prep Time: 1.5 hours."

There are blank pages at the end of the Good Housekeeping Cookbook to write in your own recipes. Someday I'll fill it with the phone numbers of places that deliver food to Shelter Island. Prep Time: 30 min., Pre-Prep Time: 0 min.

Someday I hope to write my own cookbook, from my "Good Luck with Housekeeping" book series. Most cookbooks boast recipes that are kitchen tested and terrific. I'll have a book of kitchen tested recipes that aren't necessarily terrific, but good enough to feed the unwashed, nagging, and unworthy masses. I'll call it the You've Had Worse Things In Your Mouth So Shut Up cookbook.

HONORING THE ARTIST: ROBERT MICHAELS

This week's cover by Robert Michaels is ironic in two ways: First, because of the fact that geese played a major part in recent news when a flock probably caused the US Airlines accident. Second, there's the idea that Michaels' setting seems calm enough, yet the presence of a bird in the foreground evokes a contradictory tone. Is it a protector against what is to come or an evil spirit?

Q: Your juxtaposition of images is arresting in this cover work and somewhat surreal. Am I right?

A: Some of my work could be construed as Surrealism. It's heightened reality, like a dream state, illogical. I like Dali and Magritte quite a lot.

Q: What has been your experience with creating surreal pieces?

A: When I was working for a spacecraft company as an assistant accountant, I did a Dali-like painting, and everyone knew it reflected the company and the negative feeling I had for it. I quit my job soon afterwards.

Q: Besides your surreal style, you create in a super-realistic way as well. Who and what have influenced you in that regard?

A: Chuck Close, Pete Turner as far as artists go. But I am a photographer, so that's where the realism comes in.

Q: Talking about realism, do you think photography ever captures "real life?"

A: Photography never captures reality. I'm not a purist, so it doesn't have to, but I am very careful with my imagery. Photo shop isn't going to save you if you have a lousy image.

Q: Are you saying that you're not a purist because you use digital imagery? And what's the appeal of digital technology for you?

A: Yes to the first question. I like digital methods because now I don't get paint on my fingers; a painting also takes three or four months to complete. With photography, I have more control. You can keep creating until you get what you want.

Q: But painting still influences your photography.

A: Yes. I try and get a "painterly" look with my photographs, but it's not easy.

Q: Your style is unique, to say the least. What are your intentions or aims when it comes to this style?

A: I want to please myself first. I don't try to copy anyone else's style. And some people copy from books and add something, which I don't. I keep evolving the style in my own mind.

Q: What if something you are creating doesn't work?

A: I have false starts. I either finish or stop. Some images I work on for days and then say, "What am I doing?"

Q: Does your wife, Lindy, tell you if it doesn't work? I know she was involved in a creative profession.

A: My wife tells me the truth. She'll say, "It doesn't work" or simply, "Yes."

She opened me up to color photography; I was doing only black and white photographs when I met her.

Q: Who else influenced your use of color in photographs?

A: Ernst Haas. He was the best. I even met him once at a lecture.

Q: Your ability to put yourself literally and figuratively in a scene, like the one on the cover, is a real talent. Your passion for your art comes through.

A: I'm driven with passion. I'm passionate about life.

Art Commentary by Marion Wolberg Weiss

When Images Count: Presidential Inauguration, 2009

Talk never mattered as much as in last week's inauguration of Barack Obama. Consider how the nation hung on to every word of his speech, focused in on his remarks as he made the rounds of Washington venues, and homed in on commentary of TV pundits who analyzed his discourses.

Enough already. TV is still a visual medium where images dominate, particularly before, during and after a Presidential campaign. No president since Ronald Reagan has used images as well as Obama, although there are some real standouts from the Bush administration: George W. raising an American flag at the Twin Towers' site after 9/11; and his arrival onboard a ship with the banner, "Mission Accomplished," behind him. There's no doubt about it. Pictures are worth a thousand words.

What then could the images of Obama's Inauguration activities tell us without using words? While a celebration on Sunday at the Lincoln Memorial emphasized the theme, "We are One," a recurring symmetrical image of the Washington Monument, with people flanking each side, also reinforced oneness and unity. (That same idea was present when Martin Luther King, Jr. gave his "I Have a Dream Speech" at the Lincoln Memorial decades earlier, although the monument was not particularly used as a visual metaphor.

By the same token, President Obama's speech featured a symmetrical Washington Monument again, but the angle was not eye-level as in the past examples; moreover, the image was slightly off-balance, on a diagonal, and often shot from a worm's eye-view. Such a view usually evokes power when an image seems larger-than-life. Does this suggest that our monumental icons supercede "the people?"

There were other iconic images that signified strength and power, this time in the face of uncontrollable factors (the wind). One was the persistent image of an American flag positioned in the foreground, with people standing in the background. The flapping flag remained steady and self-contained despite the swirling wind, a visual reminder of America's persistence.

Speaking of "wind," this critic couldn't help but note that President Obama used several references to climate and geography in his inauguration speech: "rising tides of prosperity and the still waters of peace"; "gathering clouds and raging storms." Such rhetorical devices, which suggest contradictory imagery, bestowed eloquence and a thematic thrust despite the opinion of people who thought his speech was "good but not great." President Obama ended with, "Let us brave once more the icy currents and endure what storms may come." Such words gave meaning to the cold Washington weather, allowing listeners to recreate such words in their minds.

Isn't that what images themselves can do? Permit us to experience what we see — and hear.

Simple Art of Cooking Silvia Lehrer

The Game Day Meal, with or without TV

Having a Game Day party? Thinking about pizza, chicken wings, dips and chips? Oh, and what about chili? All great ideas and typical fare for the much awaited Super Bowl Sunday. Chili, of course, comes in many forms, the classic ground or tiny pieces of shaved beef or even a meatless chili vegetarian style. Some say the real McCoy is bean-less or even tomato-less chili.

I was inspired by a Bon Appetit cover featuring butternut squash brisket chili. The butternut squash sitting on my counter was slated for a risotto or a soup. However the chili with winter squash just called out loud and clear. The list of ingredients was formidable, including lots of heat, which for my taste buds had to be tamed. There is still enough of a kick in the dish for those who like it hot. After reviewing the list, I decided the recipe could be prepared over a day or two, perfect for a do-ahead party chili. Colorful garnishes to serve with the chili add to the festivities.

To further tame the chili, wedges of buttery roasted apples with sweet spices are a welcome and suitable pairing. This team will surely be a winner.

TEXAS BEEF BRISKET CHILI

This all beef no bean chili gets extra-added appeal from winter butternut squash.

Prepare the chili up to 2 days ahead.

Serves 8-10

- 3 large dried ancho chilies
- 3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
- 1 4-5 pound flat-cut brisket, cut into 1 1/2-inch pieces
- 1 tablespoon each coarse (kosher) salt and paprika
- 2 large onions, about 4 cups chopped
- 4 large cloves garlic, peeled
- 1 tablespoon chili powder
- 2 teaspoons cumin seeds
- 1 teaspoon dry oregano
- 1 teaspoon ground coriander
- 1 1/2 teaspoons coarse (kosher) salt
- 1 28-oz. can whole tomatoes with liquid
- 1 12 ounce bottle beer, preferably Mexican
- 1 1/2 cups chopped fresh cilantro stems
- 2 1/2-3 pound butternut squash, peeled and cut into one-inch cubes
- Freshly ground pepper

For the garnish

- Fresh cilantro leaves
- Chopped red onion
- Diced avocado

1. Place chilies in a medium bowl with boiling water to cover. Soak for 30 minutes until softened. Drain, stem, seed and shred chilies. Reserve soaking liquid.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees.

2. Heat oil in a large ovenproof casserole, such as Le Creuset. Toss the brisket pieces with salt and paprika and sauté in batches until brown on all sides. Transfer meat to a side dish and put the onions in the casserole. Sauté onions for four to five minutes, stirring occasionally until tender.

3. Place shredded chilies in bowl of food processor or blender with one cup soaking liquid, garlic, chili powder, cumin seeds, coriander, oregano and 1 1/2 teaspoons salt. Blend to purée, adding more soaking liquid by 1/4 cupfuls if very thick. Pour purée over brisket in the casserole. Add tomatoes with juice, beer and cilantro stems and stir to coat evenly.

4. Bring chili to a simmer on the stovetop. Cover and place in oven. Cook two hours. Uncover and cook until beef is almost tender, about one hour. Add squash and stir to coat in the liquid. Roast uncovered until beef and squash are tender, adding more soaking liquid or broth if needed to keep meat covered, about 45 minutes longer. Season chili to taste with salt and pepper.

Skim off any surface fat.

To serve: set out garnishes in small separate dishes. Ladle chili into bowls and serve.

The above recipe is adapted from Bon Appetit magazine, October, 2008

ROASTED APPLE WEDGES WITH APPLE CIDER

This simplified baked apple version from Suzanne Goin's Sunday Supper at Lucques (Knopf) is a delicious way to finish a winter feast

Serves 6-8

6 tart apples, Golden delicious or greenings, cored and cut into wedges

6 tablespoons unsalted butter, melted to a nutty brown

2 tablespoons granulated sugar

2 tablespoons turbinado sugar

1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon

1/4 teaspoon freshly grated nutmeg

2 tablespoons fresh apple cider

1/4 teaspoon coarse (kosher) salt

Vanilla or caramel ice cream, optional

1. Preheat oven to 425 degrees. Place apple wedges in a bowl. Pour over the cooled melted butter. Add both sugars, cinnamon, nutmeg, cider and salt, and gently toss to mix. Arrange apples cut side up in a shallow roasting/serving pan spooning over pan juices. Lightly sprinkle additional sugar over the apples.

2. Bake apples about 40 minutes, basting with pan juices occasionally, until apples are tender and caramelized. Serve warm with ice cream, as desired.

DAN OVERBOARD

Dear Dan,

I am a professional mariner and resident of Noyac. I work as a navigation officer aboard large ocean going vessels, which takes me throughout the world. I just recently got back home after a three-month journey aboard a US flagged ship, which delivered US Army cargo to Kuwait, and the United Arab Emirates.

I had the opportunity to snap a quick picture of your paper in the Suez Canal. I figured it would be a good visual for your readers to get an idea of how far Dan's Papers and residents of the East End get around the world.

HAPPY TRAILS

Dear Susan,

When I read your article about the revenge of the Subaru, I was puzzled about the ending when you mentioned finally getting to New Hope. To me it was out of the way coming back from Pittsburgh. The answer was in your next column. You wrote about one of our favorite getaways – The Wedgewood Inn. My wife and I discovered the Wedgewood by accident in the summer of 1982 when Carl and Dinie had been open for only a few months. No room phones, no TV except in the parlor but always the hospitality of the innkeepers.

I knew about New Hope from my previous wife who came from Bucks County. The Inn was the perfect escape from my job – no phone calls, cell phones were not common then, my pager was out of range. We started taking the kids and the dogs. We were never bored. Try the carriage house next time. First floor is a kitchenette, great room and sleep sofa. Second floor is a bedroom. Very private. Kids and dogs cannot bother anybody.

PUBLIC HANDOUTS

Dear Editor,

If members of Long Island's Congressional delegation want to preach about how they disagree with a pay increase for themselves, then they should lead by example and donate the increase to charity. If members of Long Island's Congressional delegation believe in the redistribution of wealth then they should lead by example and redistribute their own wealth to those less fortunate.

These are tough economic times and while Congress passes bail out package after bailout package, our nation's debt and overall financial stability get weaker by the day. While members of Long Island's Congressional delegation state that they oppose salary increases, they accept the pay, support bail out packages adding up in to the trillions, all while the rest of us on Main Street continue to suffer. Enough is enough.

As a new Congress is sworn in, I pray that these members don't provide just more of the same. It is time for more fiscal discipline on Capitol Hill. Step 1 is for members to either rescind their pay increase or donate it to charities. Step 2 is for Congress to put the blank checks away and stop wasting taxpayer dollars.

The September bailout package was a disaster from the start and for the members that argued otherwise they should not be receiving a pay check at all.

24-ACRES AND A FOOL

Dear Dan,

Once again I leave it up to you to decide whether to publish the following:

Two corporate realtors are currently advertising two properties for sale in Sagaponack that highlight the differences among agricultural reserves.

One forty-acre property comprises an agricultural reserve plus eight building lots. Since the property is located in a two-acre zoning district, twenty houses could have been built on the forty acres. However, it appears the number of buildable lots was reduced to eight to create a 24-acre reserve. (Ref: Prudential – Web# 44155).

The second property is comprised of 7.6 acres with three buildable lots plus a "50% Agricultural Reserve." (Ref: Brown Harris Stevens Web #5349) Since this property is also located in a two-acre zoning district, the three building lots encumber six acres, leaving only 1.6 acres. It appears therefore that the three houses are being clustered on smaller-than-two-acre lots to create the "50% Agricultural Reserve." However, the act of clustering houses does not "free-up" open space to create an Agricultural Reserve that may be sold as a separate parcel.

Therefore property owners in Southampton and East Hampton have a right to know whether the "50% Agricultural Reserve" may be sold as a separate parcel, and if so, then someone should explain the legal basis for allowing it to be sold separately.

Police Blotter

No Cash

A teller bet on a dream that the bank she worked at wasn't prepared for her trying to steal some money. A woman in Sag Harbor has been accused of stealing $11,000 in cash at the bank she worked for. The security department of the bank made the accusation after an investigation took place and they recorded the theft on the bank's security cameras. If the bank decides to press charges against the woman, she could face up to one year in prison for grand larceny.

Frozen Pooch

It was a scary moment for the owners of a Hampton Bays dog that fell through the ice on Tiana Bay at the end of Tiana Circle in Hampton Bays. The dog's owner contacted police, but not before she headed out onto the ice herself with a surfboard to rescue her dog. When police arrived the dog owner had found herself waist deep in freezing cold water with her pooch, unable to get back up on the ice herself. Police officers rescued the woman. An ambulance and rescue personnel evaluated her for exposure to the cold.

Whoops

Police conducting an investigation in East Hampton asked a man to identify himself by showing his driver's license. The man reached into his pocket and produced a few random items as he searched for his license. He pulled out a few pieces of paper and then a small amount of marijuana.

Bad Santa

A man in East Hampton reported to police that two Christmas gifts were stolen from his home. One of which was a video game console valued at approximately $500 and a laptop computer valued at $1,200.

Really Bad Santa

Toys and cash worth $5,000 were stolen from a toy store in Southampton. The toys that were stolen included a remote control car, a Nintendo Wii video game system, video games and the cash in the register. Police have opened up an investigation into the incident.

Bread Smack

A man in Sag Harbor was struck hard with a French baguette directly in the face. The man got into an argument with another man at a store, which led to the bread smack. Police were not involved in the incident as it was broken up quickly by store employees. The bread smacker agreed to pay for the baguette, even though it had broken in half and fell on the floor. The bread smacker agreed not to contact authorities.

Stealing Garbage?

A man in Riverhead was arrested after he was caught removing two side-view mirrors off a junk car in a salvage yard. The man was observed by police climbing over the fence of the junkyard, and then sliding the mirrors underneath the fence. He was charged with petit larceny.

My new kitchen adds more flavor to life.

My kitchen is the heart of my family's life. So I wanted my new kitchen to capture that warmth. When I saw the full-size showroom displays at Perimeters – and the magnificent craftsmanship and deep, rich finish of Tedd Wood Fine Cabinetry – I was not only inspired, I was moved. My contractor and I teamed up with a Perimeters design consultant, and together we created a “live-in” kitchen that today exceeds my highest expectations. And we did so, literally, from scratch. Down to the finest detail. Food, friends and family – it all comes together in my wonderful new kitchen from Perimeters.
